WASHINGTON CRITIC

WASHINGTON, MARCH 27, 1885.

VETERANS ORGANIZING. The Older Members of the Light Infantry Indulge in Reminiscences. A large gathering of the surviving members of the Veterans of the Washington Light Infantry was held on Thursday evening at the armory of the Washington Light Infantry Corps, as stated in yesterday's CRITIC. A permanent organization was formed under the style and title of "Company A. Washington Light Infantry Veterans.'

An invitation was then extended to the officers of the Washington Light the officers of the Washington Light Infantry Corps to join them in meet-ing. Colonel W. G. Moore, accompa-nied by Captain W. N. Dalton, Captain Burton R. Ross, Captain John S. Mil-ler, Captain H. Dingman, Captain George Breitbarth, Captain A. W. George Breitbarth, Captain A. W. Kelley and Lieutenant P. J. Duffy visited their meeting. They were very cordially received by the old Veterans. Colonel Lemuel Towers then recited many interesting incidents in connec-tion with the District Militia from 1831 to the mustering out of the Washington to the mustering out of the Washington Light Infantry, after the late unpleasantness. He stated that the Cadets formed in the year 1831 and were commanded by Captain W. W. Moore, father of Colonel W. G. Moore, now the commanding officer of the Washington Light Infantry Corps. They disbanded in the year 1836, and on the 12th of September of that year the Washington Light Infantry was formed. Mr. Blake, the late first sergeant of the Cadets, was chosen capgeant of the Cadets, was chosen cap-

Colonel Towers then gave a brief his-Colonel Towers then gave a brief his-tory of the infantry up to the breaking out of the war, and announced that the records of the War Department would show that it was the first organization to be mustered into the country's service, Sergeant James Coleman being the first man to be sworn in. He stated that in forming the organization it was not their intention to become active members again, but feeling a deep in members again, but feeling a deep in-terest in the present organization they would be ready to render such aid as would help to promote their interest, feeling as they did, the great honor and respect due the dear old name. Colonel Moore in his usual happy mode re-sponded to Colonel Towers, stating that no greater honor could be conferred upon him than to be present at this meeting of the Veterans, he said, as he looked upon so many familiar faces he could not call himself a stranger, and that he felt proud and thanked them for their action. He reminded Colonel Towers that the organization just formed, expecting advice and in-structions from the organization he had honor to command, would be like tinued the Colonel.

The present organization was formed in May, 1871, with the late Colonel Joseph Y. Dayis as president and as captain. Its present composition is a battalion of four companies, and they had conferred upon him the honor of being their lieutenant-colonel commanding. He thought it hardly necessary to state the interest they had always felt in the welfare of the District of Columbia, evidenced in giving a hearty welcome to all visiting militia, as well as in many other acts. They as well as in many other acts. They had built themselves a home, and sup-plied the long-felt want of a grand

Resolutions were presented to the Resolutions were presented to the meeting, which set forth the advisability of having the schools managed by a board of trustees instead of by the Commissioners. Attention was called to the fact that the schools had been governed in this manner for the past eight years and the result was very satisfactory to the public. number of such trustees was placed at wenty-four, because there are 30,000 pupils in the schools, and the trustees should appoint teachers, janitors and superintendents. Expenditures for the schools should be reviewed by the Commissioners. Discussion followed, and Mr. Simon Wolf was the first speaker. He com-mended the plan proposed, and said that during no time had the schools flourished as they did under the man-agement of a full board of trustees. Dr. Reyburn refuted the idea that their Dr. Reyburn refuted the idea that their bill reflected the ideas of a few people. Dr. Chester heartily approved the bill. Dr. Domer related conversations he had had with teachers, parents and pupils, and said that they were all in favor of the bill. Messrs. John T. Given, W. H. Clagett and others spoke in favor of the bill.

There Shall be no Alps When Napoleon talked of invaling Italy one of his officers said, "But, sire, remember the Alps." To an ordinary man the ber the Alps." To an ordinary man these would have seemed simply insurmountable, but Napoleon responded eagerly, "There shall be no Alps." So the famous Simplon pass was made. Disease, like a mountain, stands in the way of fame, fortune and honor to many who by Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" might be healed and so the mountain would disappear. It is specific for all blood, chronic, lung and liver diseases, such as consumption (which is serofula of the lungs), pimples, blotches, eruptions, tumors, swellings, fever-sores and kindred complaints.

The Morton Post Fair. The charity ball for the benefit of the re lief fund of O. P. Morton Post, G. A. R., at Grand Army Hall, corner of Sixth and C streets, closed last night. "A strange request, Lucy, but I will make the promise."

"Aud Lucy expressed her gratitude by giving him a kiss. Then, taking a seat by the window, she appeared busily engaged in some fancy work, but she was, indeed, arranging a little plot in a very clever manner.

Her brother's departure the next day left her free to carry her plan into operation. Being an orphan and in the operation. Being an orphan and in the possession of a snug little fortune of er own, there was no one to control any of her actions while her brother was away.

Her first move was a strange one.

She took off her handsome silk gown, combed her hair out of its crimps and curis, brushed it straight back from her face, and tucked it in a little knot behind. Then dressing herself in a somewhat worn alreas and featuring somewhat worn alpaca, and fastening a plain collar about her neck, she looked in the glass and laughed heartily.

"I think I shall do nicely," she said. "I am certain she will never recognize me in this rig."

So with a look of satisfaction on her face she put on a plain hat and shawl, having previously given notice to the landlady that she would be absent a few days.

She walked directly to Mrs. Faulk-ner's and rang the bell, inquiring for Miss Amy.

She was shown up stairs into a pretty room, where Amy sat sewing.

She spoke kindly to Lucy, and asked her to be seated. Lucy told her business in a few words. ness in a few words.

"Miss Jones, the seamstress, sent me, if you please, ma'am. She says she's very sorry, but she's engaged this week and can't come to you, but she thought maybe I'd do as well, miss."

"I dare say you will," said Amy, kindly, as she led her into the sewingroom, after asking her one or two questions about her capacity for work. tions about her capacity for work.

Lucy understood sewing very well and was able to give satisfaction, but she grew rather tired of her masquerade. She had made no progress in discovering any flaw in Amy's disposition or manners.

position or manners. One morning she heard her talking in the next room to her mother. "There is such a lovely white pop-lin at Robinson's," said Amy. "It is creamy and rich and heavy. It is just the thing I want for Ada Hyat's wedding. I can trim it with that Spanish iace. It will be charming.

"Well, Amy, you must promise not to ask anything more till after Christto ask anything more till after Christmas, for our expenses have been very heavy this year."

"Dear mamma, don't say another word; I was wrong to ask it. I can do without it."

"No, my child, you really need a new dress and you shall have it. The poolin will be your pretty and service.

Amy heard the money counted out to the young girl, and an enthusiastic discussion about how the dress was to

When Amy entered the sewing-room a little while after she saw the young scamstress with her head bowed in her hands sobbing bitterly. "Why, what's the matter?" she asked anxiously. But no answer came from the apparently convulsed Lucy.

"Do please tell me," said Amy, with emotion, stealing her arm about Lucy's neck. "Oh, nothing, miss," said the little hypocrite.
"But I know you would not cry so if you were not unbappy. Do tell me what troubles you." So Lucy, with a broken voice and convulsive sobs, told the sail story of an invalid mother, drunken father, helpless little ones and heartless landlord, who threatened to turn them in the street if the rent wes not paid that day.

Amy's eyes filled with tears. "No. no; it shall not be!" she cried. "Here Now never "Here is the money for the rent. Now, never mind the work. Go at once and pay up the landlord. Take it, it's mine to do as I choose with, and I choose to give it to you."

give it to you."

Lucy felt very guilty as she went away. But instead of going directly home she went to Robinson's and bought the white poplin and ordered it to be sent to Mrs. Faulkner.

That evening, much to Lucy's delight, Albert came home.

"Oh!" cried Lucy, "I take back all I said against Amy Faulkner, for she is the darlingest, the dearest, the sweetest little thing, with the kinflest, the warmest heart in all the world!"

"I found that out long ago," said

"I found that out long ago," said her brother, laughing, "but I should be delighted to know what has changed your opinion."

She told him how she had been playing seamstress and the result. He scolded her for the deception she had practiced, but he did not seem very Amy wore the white poplin at Ada Hyat's wedding, and looked lovely in it, but not so charming as three months
